Young man：That seminar yesterday on automation and the future of work was really good, wasn't it?
：Looking at the first industrial revolution in Britain in the 19th century and seeing how people reacted to massive change was a real eye-opener.
Young woman：Yes. It was interesting to hear how people felt about automation then and what challenges they faced. I didn't know that first started with workers in the textile industry.
Young man：With those protesting workers called the Luddites destroying their knitting machines because they were so worried about losing their jobs.

PART 3 Questions 21–30

Questions 21 and 22

Choose TWO letters, A–E.

Young woman：Yes, and ultimately, they didn't achieve anything.（A 对）And anyway, industrialisation created more jobs than it destroyed.
Young man：Yes, that's true – but it probably didn't seem a positive thing at the time. I can see why the Luddites felt so threatened.（E 对）
Young woman：I know. I'm sure I would have felt the same.

Which TWO opinions about the Luddites do the students express?

A Their actions were ineffective.
B They are still influential today.
C They have received unfair criticism.
D They were proved right.
E Their attitude is understandable.

Questions 23 and 24

Choose TWO letters, A–E.

正话反说： 相反+ 怀疑信号词

Which TWO predictions about the future of work are the students doubtful about?

值得，有意义

A Work will be more rewarding.
B Unemployment will fall.
C People will want to delay retiring.
D Working hours will be shorter.
E People will change jobs more frequently. stable

The discussion about the future of work was really optimistic for a change.
：I like the idea that work won't involve doing boring, repetitive tasks, as robots will do all that.（A错）
：Normally, you only hear negative stuff about the future.
Young man：Bit too optimistic, don't you think?
：For example, I can't see how people are about to have more leisure time, when all the evidence shows people are spending longer than ever at work.（D 对）
Young woman：No – that's true.
：And what about lower unemployment?
：I'm not so sure about that.（B 对）
Young man：Perhaps in the long term – but not in the foreseeable future.
Young woman：Mmm.
：And I expect most people will be expected to work until they're much older – as everyone's living much longer.
Young man：That's already happening.（C 错）

Don't you like coffee?（你不喜欢咖啡吗？）
Yes, I do. 我喜欢，No, I don't .我不喜欢

Jobs

25 Accountants — You might think all the technological innovations would have put them out of a job, but in fact there are more of them than ever. They're still really in demand and have become far more efficient. Twenty times more accountants in this country compared to the 19th century.

26 Hairdressers — I'd never have thought that demand for hairdressing would have gone up so much in the last hundred years. One hairdresser for every 287 people now, compared to one for over 1,500. Yeah because people's earning power has gone up so they can afford to spend more on personal services like that.

27 Administrative staff — Even 20 years ago there were secretaries doing dictation and typing. Yes. Really boring compared to these days, when they're given much more responsibility and higher status.

28 Agricultural workers — But the 1871 census (人口普查)showed that roughly 25% of the population worked on the land. Young man: Yeah, I'd have assumed it would be more than 50%. Now it's less than 0.2%.

29 Care workers — They barely existed in the 19th century as people's lifespan was so much shorter. But now of course this sector will see huge growth. Yeah – and it's hard enough to meet current demand.

30 Bank clerks — The future looks quite bleak for bank clerks. They've been in decline since ATMs were introduced in the eighties. And technology will certainly make most of the jobs they do now redundant, I think. I agree, although the situation may change. It's very hard to predict what will happen.
