Bidcaster Archaeological Dig

To reach the bridge, take the main path ahead of you. Go straight on and keep going till the path bends to the left. You'll see a smaller track leading off to the right. Follow that to take you to the river, where the divers are.

B 17 bridge foundations

A 18 rubbish pit
坑

G 19 meeting hall

E 20 fish pond

This is very near the castle walls in the north west corner of the site. It actually dates to the time of the castle and not the ancient village.

We knew it was an important building because it had two rows of post holes deep enough to support a large roof. It's the largest structure in the central area of the site, next to the current excavation area.

Normally, these were beside a river. The pond here is further away, but it's possible the river has moved slightly. Anyway, you turn right at the first information board you come to and follow the path into the trees. Before you come out of the trees, you'll see it on your right. If you reach the river, you've gone too far.

Project on Theatre Programmes

说明书, 计划, 方案, 程序

- (B) 21 Finn was pleased to discover that their topic

- A was not familiar to their module leader.
B had not been chosen by other students.
C did not prove to be difficult to research.

No one else on the course is doing the same as us, although it is one of the research areas of the module convenor.
 该模块/课程课程负责人的研究领域之一 会议召集人
Even though I struggled to find many useful websites, I'm glad we picked this subject.

- (A) 22 Maya says a mistaken belief about theatre programmes is that

- A theatres pay companies to produce them.
B few theatre-goers buy them nowadays.
C they contain far more adverts than previously.

Contrary to what many people think, theatres don't hire people to do the programmes, in fact companies buy the rights to publish programmes on the theatre's behalf – and then make their money selling advertising space within the programme booklet.

- (C) 23 Finn was surprised that, in early British theatre, programmes

- A were difficult for audiences to obtain.
B were given out free of charge.
C were seen as a kind of contract.

But I hadn't realized that if the program named a famous actor, that's who the public expected to perform. And if that didn't happen, people accused the theatre of breaking their agreement with the audience.

cast 演员阵容
 riot 暴乱, 骚乱 outrageous 离谱的

契约, 合同

- (A) 24 Maya feels their project should include an explanation of why companies of actors

- A promoted their own plays.
B performed plays outdoors.
C had to tour with their plays.

I also think it's important to mention that lots of ordinary people at that time were illiterate, so theatre programmes were of limited value in advertising plays. When a company of actors arrived in a town, they'd parade around the streets in their costumes, beating drums and announcing their upcoming performances.

illiterate
 文盲的, 不识字的 illiteracy uneducated cannot read or write

事实, 不是原因, 具体只穿戏服/敲鼓/宣传, 没表演

- (C) 25 Finn and Maya both think that, compared to nineteenth-century programmes, those from the eighteenth century

- A were more original.
B were more colourful.
C were more informative.

Yes. And, unlike programmes from the eighteenth century, they always used colour. And there was a greater variety of designs. (都是19世纪特点)
But personally, I think eighteenth-century programmes were superior because they told the theatre-goers so many things, including about the actors. And about the writer, the plot, and sometimes the history of the play. That's right.

- (B) 26 Maya doesn't fully understand why, in the twentieth century,

- A very few theatre programmes were printed in the USA.
B British theatre programmes failed to develop for so long.
C theatre programmes in Britain copied fashions from the USA.

I reckon the most important thing is the dramatic change they underwent during World War Two. When the government imposed restrictions on the use of paper. Yeah, but that was only in the UK.

In the USA, programmes – or rather, playbills – continued to be published in the same format ... while here in the UK, programmes became merely a single sheet of paper folded to create four pages for text.

What I don't really get is that after the war, they didn't go back to being more than one sheets, or change in any way for over 25 years. I know there were paper shortages after the war, but only for 5 or 10 years. Hmm, strange.

Questions 27–30

What comment is made about the programme for each of the following shows?

Choose FOUR answers from the box and write the correct letter, A–F, next to Questions 27–30.

Comments about programme

- B It is historically significant for a country. 历史意义, 国家 meaningful
- C It was effective at attracting audiences. 有效, 观众 more people
- D It is included in a recent project. 最近, 近期项目 days / years
- E It contains insights into the show. 深刻见解, 洞察力, 看法 think, thoughts, ideas
- F It resembles an artwork. 艺术品 beautiful, wonderful

Show

- F 27 Ruy Blas Never heard of that, but the programme looks very decorative. 装饰性的
Good enough to put in a frame on the wall. The images are just beautiful.
- E 28 Man of La Mancha I thought this was a good program to show, but because it contains articles written by members of the theatre company. So we can learn how the production was created, and the thoughts and feelings of the cast.
- B 29 The Tragedy of Jane Shore it's said to be the earliest surviving document to have been printed on Australia's first printing press.
- D 30 The Sailors' Festival It comes from the British Library's digitized collection of programmes that was started a few years ago. It already comprises over two hundred thousand programmes, which is amazing.
